routinely stopped and results accepted as genuine notwithstanding higher P-values than the conventional.

programs must seek empirical adequacy, which requires that theories account for observations. How much accuracy... error. The situation and pragmatic interests of the inquirer or of the users of a theory may therefore...

Kuhn (1977) argued that scientists need to appeal to cognitive values to take up the slack between theory... (conservatism). Longino (1994) argues that feminists have reason to prefer theories that manifest...

any body of observations, and the same observations will support different hypotheses. For example, the failure to...

science is thought to consist in pressuring scientists to ignore the facts and validate their worldviews. For the...

Virtually all feminists acknowledge that a plurality of situated knowledges appears to be an inescapable consequence of social differentiation and embodiment.4. Feminist Empiricism...

judge's superior authority over others in the courtroom. As words get their meaning from their relations to...

that captures the whole truth. A discourse with different terms would contain meanings not available in the...

interests are defined objectively, the facts that constitute the group and its interests are publicly accessible. The...

... consciousness": the ability to see both from the perspective of the dominant and from the perspective of the...

advantaged (1) in revealing fundamental social regularities; (2) in exposing social arrangements as contingent rather than necessary, or that women have an essence that explains and justifies their subordination. The claim...

... discourse with different terms would contain meanings not available in the ...

... consciousness": the ability to see both from the perspective of the dominant and from the perspective of the...

advantaged (1) in revealing fundamental social regularities; (2) in exposing social arrangements as contingent rather than necessary, or that women have an essence that explains and justifies their subordination. The claim...

... consciousness": the ability to see both from the perspective of the dominant and from the perspective of the...

advantaged (1) in revealing fundamental social regularities; (2) in exposing social arrangements as contingent rather than necessary, or that women have an essence that explains and justifies their subordination. The claim...

... consciousness": the ability to see both from the perspective of the dominant and from the perspective of the...

advantaged (1) in revealing fundamental social regularities; (2) in exposing social arrangements as contingent rather than necessary, or that women have an essence that explains and justifies their subordination. The claim...

... consciousness": the ability to see both from the perspective of the dominant and from the perspective of the...

advantaged (1) in revealing fundamental social regularities; (2) in exposing social arrangements as contingent rather than necessary, or that women have an essence that explains and justifies their subordination. The claim...

... consciousness": the ability to see both from the perspective of the dominant and from the perspective of the...

advantaged (1) in revealing fundamental social regularities; (2) in exposing social arrangements as contingent rather than necessary, or that women have an essence that explains and justifies their subordination. The claim...

... consciousness": the ability to see both from the perspective of the dominant and from the perspective of the...

advantaged (1) in revealing fundamental social regularities; (2) in exposing social arrangements as contingent rather than necessary, or that women have an essence that explains and justifies their subordination. The claim...

... consciousness": the ability to see both from the perspective of the dominant and from the perspective of the...

advantaged (1) in revealing fundamental social regularities; (2) in exposing social arrangements as contingent rather than necessary, or that women have an essence that explains and justifies their subordination. The claim...

... consciousness": the ability to see both from the perspective of the dominant and from the perspective of the...

advantaged (1) in revealing fundamental social regularities; (2) in exposing social arrangements as contingent rather than necessary, or that women have an essence that explains and justifies their subordination. The claim...

... consciousness": the ability to see both from the perspective of the dominant and from the perspective of the...

advantaged (1) in revealing fundamental social regularities; (2) in exposing social arrangements as contingent rather than necessary, or that women have an essence that explains and justifies their subordination. The claim...